

The Last Five Mornings

Five short registrations for a form's last week together, one a morning: something you are taking with you, a person in this room you want to thank, something you would tell yourself on your first day, one thing you will not miss, and a last one written to the form. Each answer is a sentence or two on a card, and the cards are read out on the last morning. It gives a form a way to end that is not just the bell going on the last day.

Before you start. Some students are leaving a school that has not been kind to them, and one or two will be leaving a home as well as a form. Nothing has to be read out, the Thursday card is about things rather than people, and you read every card before Friday. Anything on a card that worries you is handled the way you would handle it on any other day.

The week

Morning	What happens	Slide
Monday	Something I am taking with me. A sentence or two on the card, handed in before the bell.	2
Tuesday	Somebody here I want to thank. Say who and what for. This one is never read out unless the writer wants to.	3
Wednesday	What I would tell first-day me. One sentence to the person who walked in on day one.	4
Thursday	Something I will not miss. Things, not people: a room, a rule, a bus.	5
Friday	To this form. One or two sentences to everyone in the room. This is the card that is read out.	6
The last morning	Hand the cards back. Everyone reads their Friday card, and any of the others they want to. Anyone who would rather not read hands theirs to you.	7

Worth knowing

- Keep the cards between mornings. A card taken home does not come back.
- Read every card on Thursday evening, so that Friday morning has no surprises in it.
- It is written for Year 11 and Year 13. It works for any form that will not be a form next year, and for a tutor who is leaving too.
