

Mood Scale

A simple printable scale for a check-in when words do not come easily. A student points to the number that feels closest to today, and that is where the conversation starts. It helps them put a name to how they are feeling.

Print these

Page	What it is	How many
Page 2	The one-to-five scale, from “really struggling” to “having a great day”	One, printed and laminated if you can

How it works

Step	What happens
1	Show the scale and ask which number feels closest to today. A student just points, so there is no writing or talking needed to start.
2	Ask gently what is behind the number, if they want to say more. If not, that is fine too. There is no wrong number.
3	Use the same scale again another day, and notice whether the number moves.

Worth knowing

- It works well at the start or end of a conversation, and alongside Conversation Starters.
- Keep the scale itself the same over time, so a student can notice their own number moving.

Print it once, laminate it, and it will last for years.

Which one feels closest to today?

1	2	3	4	5
Really struggling	Having a hard day	Okay	Feeling good	Having a great day

Point to a number. There's no wrong answer.